

Re-visioning Case Management: Partnering with Families and Communities to Create Meaningful Change

May 19, 2011 in San Diego

Please join us as we challenge and expand how we think about the relationship between case management services and community engagement.

In communities everywhere, family strengthening organizations (FSOs) are striving to provide the best possible services to individuals and families even as their numbers rise and resources shrink. At the same time, FSOs are increasingly questioning whether case management services alone are helping people make lasting improvements in their lives.

Each convening is designed for participants to:

1. Learn how organizations are partnering with families and communities to make meaningful change.
2. Reflect how your organization is providing services and engaging community.
3. Identify the knowledge, skills, and attitudes needed for change.
4. Explore implications of this work for your organization, the family strengthening field, and Strategies.
